DEGREE OVERVIEW

English majors study the cultural production of English-speaking people across time and space, combining historical, linguistic and cultural analysis with creative work in literature, film and emerging media. Our faculty teach classes in creative writing, rhetoric, technical and professional writing, gender and women's studies, film, digital humanities, science fiction and fantasy alongside the full range of literatures and varieties of English. Exploring these rich and wide areas of inquiry, students acquire key skills – thinking critically, analyzing complex texts and contexts, communicating persuasively and appreciating the aesthetic and cultural value of literary and multimedia texts – preparing them for success in the workplace and in life.

UNDERGRADUATE RESEARCH

Every fall and spring semester, the English Department offers a number of Undergraduate Professional and Research Experience Program (UPREP) projects. The UPREP opportunities are exclusive to English majors.

Program benefits include a $750 stipend, experience as a research or project assistant for a faculty member, and the opportunity to develop an ENGL 485 course in conjunction with the project.
